History: Originated in 13th cent. in a group of Turks from cen. Asia who entered Anatolia (already under Seljuks) and established small state, traditionally ruled by Osman I (1288-1326); beginning with Orkhan I (1326-59), an empire was organized on both sides of the Straits (see DARDANELLES); by end of 15th cent., it had liquidated Byzantine Empire (q.v.) and included Balkan region, i.e. Rumelia, Macedonia, Thessaly, Morea (Peloponnesus), Serbia, Walachia, Bosnia, Bulgaria, and Albania (q.v.), most of the Aegean Is., rest of Anatolia, and Crimea; overthrew Mamelukes and secured Syria and Egypt; at its height under Suleiman the Magnificent (1520-66) who took Armenia, Azerbaijan, Mesopotamia, and Baghdad, North African coast, and, in Europe, territory from frontier of Holy Roman Empire to shores of Black Sea; although Crete, Cyprus, Arabian coasts, and Caucasus territory were later added to Ottoman holdings, the power of the empire began to decline in late 16th cent.; by series of exhausting wars with Poland, Austria, and Russia in 17th and 18th cents., Turks were expelled from Hungary and northern shores of Black Sea; in 19th cent., because of internal corruption, the steady southward advance of Russia (q.v.), and the successful revolts of the Balkans, the weakened Ottoman ruler came to be known as "Sick Man of Europe"; the problem of preventing too rapid a dissolution of the empire in face of Russian advance became the "Eastern Question" of European diplomacy (caused Crimean War 1854-56); after much negotiation 1888-99 and opposition from other countries, granted Nov. 25, 1899 concessions to Germany for Berlin-Baghdad R.R. (see EGYPT, TUNIS, and TRIPOLI for loss of its African holdings); Macedonia, the last extensive European territory, lost in First Balkan War 1912-13; as one of Central Powers in World War I, was an important area of conflict (see GALLIPOLI PENINSULA, MESOPOTAMIA, etc.); sultan accepted Treaty of Sèvres (1920) by which empire gave up Cyprus, Dodecanese, Smyrna, Mesopotamia, Palestine and Syria, Arabia, Armenia, and control of Straits; meanwhile, the nationalist government at Ankara called congress 1919 and finally proclaimed republic of Turkey (q.v.) 1923.
